The materials to be digitized consist of three softbound volumes of approximately 8 1/2x11” dimension. The content consists of typewritten tables, black and white and color maps of Chicago census tracts, color pie charts, and other miscellaneous black and white figures.

The Works Progress Administration sponsored an investigation into the characteristics of the African-American community during late 1930's Chicago. This investigation yielded government publications on the general demographics of the community, occupational data, and information about churches and voluntary organizations. Included are statistical analyses broken down by census tracts, descriptive prose, and graphical elements from political cartoons to maps.
